gas on the Western Front, the immediate effects were devastating to the other side. But the new weapon posed problems for the Germans as well; a windshift could send it back to its own lines. Even in the later stages of World War I, when gas was sent over by both contestants in artillery shells. it could drench an area so completely as to inhibit capture. Gas, very clearly, was a two-edged sword of highly questionable efficiency, and so it was banned from war-

But while the ban was euccessful, fear that it might not be, led everyone to experiment with the stuff, and keep it in reserve in case someone else might try it. And even this precaution has proved doubleedged, as the Pentagon's quandary over its obsolete nerve gas proves.

No one can be quite sure what will happen if the gas is dumped in the sea, or even what might accidentally occur in transit. So mayors and governors, island states and the British government itself have protested the project. But it is reasonably certain that if nothing is done, the results could be catastrophic. The best that can be said of the dumping process is that it represents the least dangerous of a number of alternatives -but assuming that is true, it is a decisive argument.

The lesson, of course, is not to make such dangerous stuff in the first place. Reprisals,

When the Kalser's army first loosed poison or the fear of them, can be the most dangerous aspect of man's hostility to man. It was the chief justification for the creation of the atomic bomb, whose initial, tragic appearance over Hiroshima, 25 years ago, has just been so widely mourned. It was, presumably, the reason why the Soviet Union engaged in its own nuclear development (although at that time there was a more humane alternative in the American proposal to internationalize nuclear energy). It spurred on Britain, France and China in the same direction, and leaves the world oow in a state of acute nuclear euspense.

The dilemma confronting a nation at war. when considering the use of new and more terrible weapons or tactics, is sharp and real. The casualty lists, the presumed issues at stake, the passione of conflict, do not make a good atmosphere in which to consider all possible effects rationally. But surely peace-or at least the absence of major war-can allow better judgments to be made, and to admit at least the possibility that a new weapon may explode in the maker's hand.

And, of course, it is true that even the most efficient arms are really double-edged: that, as was discovered just a century ago, a French chassepot might be the finest military rifle in the world, but enough inferior Prussian needle-guns could kill the bearers of the chassepot. The logic of war is, in the end, illogical-and fatal.

The President, the Press and the Jury

Over the past few months, we have remarked from time to time that the news media are not as careful about the rights of those charged with crime as they ought to be. The assumption is made all too often that a person is guilty of the crime with which he has been charged even before he comes to trial. It is an easy assumption to make, as President Nixon demonstrated in his remarks about the Manson case. And it is an assumption that once written or epoken is impossible to recall or to clarify or to do anything else about—other than to wish it hadn't happened.

The President, quite rightly, seems to be embarrassed about pre-judging that murder case. He is, after all, a lawyer of considerable standing who knows hetter, and right beside him when he slipped was another lawyer of considerable standing, the Attorner General. Nevertheless, the President's mistake might be brushed aside as a slip of the tongue except for the context in which it was made and the fact that the same thing happened once before concerning the My Lai episode. A President who sets out to talk about the integrity of the administration of justice simply has to be sure that what he is saying does not harm that integrity. Yet Mr. Nixon chose as his example a case that was in trial before a jury. That alone, it seems to ns. reflects a somewhat careless attitude about the process of justice.

It is that attitude, not the details of this particular incident, that bothers us. The fact that the jury is under guard alleviated to a great extent the prejudicial impact of the President's comment and we see no reason to be concerned about Mr. Manson's attempt to show the comment to the jurors. If Mr. Manson wants to prejudice the jury by his own acts, maybe he has a constitutional right to an unfair trial as well as to a fair one.

Far more troubling are other aspects of the President's comments. We think, for instance, that Mr. Nixon was dead wrong in charging the press with glamorizing Mr. Manson and his followers. Our impression from following this case rather closely is just the opposite; we have seen little to make any aspect of the affair appear glamorous except to those who are sick. It is true that the press does occasionally make crime appear glamorous but in his eagerness to keep the press on the defensive, the President could hardly have chosen a less convincing example,

He was equally thoughtless in his attack on the lawyers who are defending Mr. Manson. Maybe the President is right in lumping them with others who are attempting to tear down the system of justice. But we doubt that he, or anyone else who has not been in that courtroom in Los Angeles or had an opportunity to read the full transcript, is in a position to make such a serious attack on professional reputations, There have been too many examples lately of judges as well as lawyers meddling with announcement, but Nixon told his fell under widespread political the scales of justice to permit anyone to Thursday press conference in Los suspicion, but the message now make a casual judgment in such a situation.

The whole incident, it seems to us, is part of the President's effort to paint himself and his administration as the "good guys" who are upholding law enforcement personnel and judges against the "bad guys" who want to place some limits on their power. Unfortunately, the world is not that simple. All the critics of the existing system of justice are not bad guys; they have no connection with or affinity for Charles Manson; and it doesn't help public understanding much for Mr. Nixon to go around helpless to save the republic. induging in pre-judgements and over-simplification.

A Familiar Beast in Cambodia

That haunting and all too recognizable beast of the Indochina jungles, the twotoned commitment-also known as the heavy-footed undertaking and the creeping rationale-again seems to be on the prowl, this time in Cambodia. In pulling American ground forces out of that newly troubled land at the end of June, Mr. Nixon had broadcast assurances that future American operations there would be confined to air actions mounted for the purpose of protecting American lives back in South Vietnam. In spirit though assuredly not in letter, the President has seemed anxious to respect the intent of the Senate which, in the Cooper-Church Amendment to the Foreign Military Sales Act and in the Armed Services Committee's language in the Military Procurement Bill, has plainly opposed a policy of supporting the government of Lon Nol.

It now turns out, however-who can say he is really eurprised?—that the United States is conducting hombing raids in Camhodia that have only the most tenuous connection with the original rationale of interdicting enemy forces en route to Vietnam. As many as 50 planes a day are flying combat eupport missions for beleaguered units of the Cambodian Army and, the Cambodian Army being what it is, there are few active units in it which are not heleaguered. American military officials chose to say that the planes are interdicting "enemy troops or material which could threaten U.S. and other free-world lives in South Vietnam." And Secretary Laird appears further to have broadened the definition of "interdiction." But as a Cambodian officer told a correspondent while American F-100s circled over a local battlefield "This is direct support for my battalion, watch." And down came the planes, with bombs, napalm and incendiary bullets in turn.

Senate on Wednesday. "If this continues," he warned, "It could mean that we will have a repetition of what happened in Vietnam; namely, that first we will provide air support, then send advisers, then deploy troops, and thus get into a full-fledged war." We do not think things will continue that far, to a "full-fledged war." Nonetheless, the inadequats performance of the Cambodian Army, despite American air support and South Vietnamese help too; and the plan- has much to show as yet for all ned expansion of the American aid program this diplomatic activity, but the in Cambodia from $8 million to $30 million; talks are proceeding. The secret conversations with China have and the increasing isolation of the Lon Nol government in one corner of the country; and its deepening dependence on the United States—all these developments are extremely unsetting. The argument for confining American raids strictly to border and trail interdiction of Vietnam-bound men and material grows stronger by the day.

WASHINGTON.-You can hard-sultation with the Foreign Belaly tune in the evening news these days without hearing the low grumble of Senator Fulbright's voice. To hear him tell it, the world is in a terrible pickle, the State and Defense Departments are leading us to unimaginable disastere and the poor old Senate is

Yet the fact is that the personal relations between the gloomy chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and the secretaries of State and Defense are not only cordial but even chummy, and over the last year and a half the Nixon administration has begun adopting most of the policiee Fulbright has been advocating for years.

For example, he was for the ratification of the non-proliferation treaty, and the opening of etrategic arms limitation talks with the Soviets, both of which the administration approved. He has been arguing for a reduction of U.S. commitments abroad, lower defense budgets, and new efforts to reach. accommodations with the

Sen. Mansfield voiced his alarm to the Communist world. "But this is precisely what we have been doing," says Secretary of State Rogers: the Pentagon budget is coming down, the troops are coming home not only from but from Korea and Thailand as well, the Nixon Doctrine is designed to cut U.S. commitments in Asia, and formal negotiations are in train to ease tensions between the major powers in the Middle East and in Europe. It is true, of course, that nobody been in recess for a while, but will be starting up again soon. The four major allies of the last World War—the U.S., the U.S.S.R., Britain and France are trying again to compose their differences over Berlin. Secretaries Rogers and Laird, with the approval of the President, have been encouraging Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany to reach a nonaggression pact with the Soviet Union and a reconciliation with the other Communist states of Eastern Europe, and even the long-delayed security conference between the NATO and Warsaw Pact powers is now getting a more sympathetic hearing from Rogers and Laird than at any time in the past.

Still, there are fundamental differences between Fulbright and the administration. He concedes that there is agreement on most of eeed much faster, and that confrom Nixon on down. .: A percentage which will be important for generations was also revealed last week: the census survey indicates that the suburbs have surpassed the cities in population. The numbers are votes, mostly Republican votes now. As for the cities: Nixon told his press conference he knew the harsh anti-crime bill he signed for Washington, D.C., was "unprecedented," but it was meant to guarantee, "freedom, from fept", for the great, percentage of citizens who are peaceful.

Issues and events are moving with the continuing campaign, too. Speaking of the Middle East, Nixon. talked to his audience about the difficult job of reducing the possibilities of war in the world, about the dangers of small nations pushing the big powers into war. And the next morning Israel indicated not see fit to act on them. it would accept his proposals for a

And, if Congress insists on pass-ing other budgets larger than the President wants, Nixon is on the offensive, saying that Congress is irresponsible and conjuring up before the whole nation the specter of new taxes unless Congress shapes up. What might have become a real, gut-issue national debate on the country's priorities and goals is being turned very deftly into wind in the sails of the great campaign.

Prospective opposition to the President seems distant and dreary now. The Democrats are poor and confused. Their leadership was meeting last week trying to push reform and publicly frightening one another with memories of the 1968 convention. But some of the old-line party leaders, who can count votes as well as Nixon, are beginning to worry now about the outcome of this year's congressional elections. A few of their certain wins look a little less certain to them now. The Republican party has all the money and the President seems to be taking all the

2 Campus Reports A Year Apart

By David S. Broder

W dent," the letter of trans-mittal began, "we submit to you the following report on campus aware of the response he would unrest. The critical urgency of the problem cannot be everstated.".

The date of the letter was June 17, 1969, and the signatories were 22 Republican congressmen, who had undertaken an unpublished tour of 50 colleges at the request of the White House.

This 1969 report makes interesting-and disturbing-reading now, in the wake of Mr. Nixon's cool reaction to a similarly urgent warning from Dr. Alexander Heard, the chancellor of Vanderbilt University and recent White House adviser on campus problems.

Heard asked the President to recognize that the sources and scope of campus unrest constitute "a national emergency, to be ad-dressed with the sense of urgency and openness of mind required by national emergencies." He urged the President to take the initistive in seeking to understand the crisis and alleviate it.

By way of response, Mr. Nixon told his press conference last week it was "vary shortsighted" for academics to "put the blame for the problems of universities on the government ..." The government is doing its part, he said, by trying to end the war, end the draft, end-pollution and end the concentration of power in Washington. Let the universities "do better" in keeping their students in hand, he said, and not come crying to Uncle Sam.

No Surprise

If that response seemed callons, it was not a surprise to many of the Republican congressmen who had tried to get the message to Mr. Nixon a year earlier.

The 22 GOP legislators were no left-wing clique but a genuine cross-section of the party. If they differed at all from their colleagues in the House, it was because they were closer to college age themzelves than most congressmen. The chairman of the committee was Rep. William E. Brock 3d of Tennessee, a staunch conservative now running for the Senate (along with two other members) with White House backing.

Their findings contained those of the Heard report, point by point.
While stating that "the revolutionaries on campus who desire to destroy our system are few in number," the congressmen reported, "the emergence of a large group, probably the vast majority of student leaders and a substantial number of intalligent, concerned and perplexed young people, which has genuine concern over what it feels, is the difference between the promise and the performance of

The congressmen, like Heard, cited student dissatisfaction with conditions in both the university and the nation. They stressed the need for improved communication. and for action by students them-selves, university administrators and the government.

In the realm of federal action, they made ten specific recommendations—and today they regret that the leader of their party did "I think honestly I've been very disappointed in the lack of response At the beginning of last week to the specific recommendations," the White House announced new said Rep. Thomas F. Railsback, R., Ill. a committee member. "The President did not pay much attention to our report. I think he recommendations last week. He said Mr. Nixon "deserves high praise" for working against "repressive legislation" aimed at putting down campus dissent, as they had urged him to do. Steiger also applicated the start in dragreform by the administration—another of the committee's recommendations.

Voting Age

He noted that Congress had lowered the voting age to 18 as the committee had recommended and that students themselves "have responded vitally" to the idea of broadening their participation in electoral politics, as the committee had hoped.

But then Steiger tolled the list of recommendations on which little or no action has be A national youth foundation to spur community involvement be young people; a student teacher corps; expanded aid to low. income students; a central office in the federal government to coordinate national youth programs a presidential commission higher education. In an interview the Wisconsin congressman pointed to "a prob-lem in the translation of what the President says and means into what the administration does. We recommended that people go out from the White House to leave what was happening on the campuses. The President supported it, but it was not done until it was too late.

"I am convinced," he continued "that if our recommendations had been acted on, the severe reaction to Cambodia, Kent State and Jackson State might have been adverted. After they occurred, the administration reacted. So the message I get from that is that if you're violent, you get a result; and if you're not, you won't. And that, I think, is a serious error." Rep. Edward G. Biester jr. R.

Pa., a third member of the com-mittee, said he thought the reluctance of the administration to act was explainable "because the message we brought is uncomfortable A majority of the young people on campus are in a state of disaffection from the present set of our institutional structure. That's s fact that's very difficult for people to grasp."

With the Heard report making the same point and the testimony before the Scranton commission pointing to the same conclusion, Blester thinks the uncomfortable truth may begin to penetrate.

But his committee colleague, Rep. Albert Quie, R., Minn., is not sure even that will suffice. "Recommendations of study groups never cept on those who make them."

"Maybe, eventually, we'll reach the point where so many people will have served on study commisions on campus unrest that the majority will be with us." And maybe, eventually, there will be a President who is less prone to dismiss the bearers of bad news as

A Million Allies Save the Day For the Argylls

LONDON, Aug. 7 (AP).-Scotland kilted Argyll and Sntherland Highlanders, a regiment of legendary fighters, won a reprieve from the Conservative government yesterday.

The Defense Ministry said the Argylls are among several historic regiments being offered a chance to keep their names alive.

Instead of being disbanded, the regiments may each maintain a company of 120 men that will keep the old regimental title.

The recently ousted Labor government had intended to end the regiments' existence to cnt defense costs and streamline the army.

The threat to the Argylls caused protests which resulted in presentation to the Defense Ministry of a save-the-regiment petition with a million

Police, Hippies Clash at Disneyland; Park Closes Early

DISNEYLAND, Calif., Aug. 7 (WP).—A carefree hippie "in-vasion" turned sour last night as 100 riot-squad policemen occupied Disneyland'e famous Main Street U.S.A. and officials or-

Street U.S.A. and officials or-dered the 74-acre park closed early for the first time in its 15-year history.

At its largest, the invasion force of youths with long hair and headhands and girls without bras numbered about 300. All day long the youngsters wander-ed through the amusement cen-ter, at me point behind a brass band, sometimes shouting "Yippeccecee" like an Indian war whoop and raising clenched fists.

At about 6:30 p.m. they filed to Town Square, where Main Street begins, and congregated there. The vice-president of Walt Disney Productions pleaded with them to leave, but they refused and started back into. the park down Main Street-the main entran: 2 to the amusement center. A line of plain-clothes Disneyland security personnel tried to block the march, but there was a skirmish.

At that point, from a staging area where they had waited all day, police from Anaheim, Fullerton and Costa Mess emerged to form a phalanx across Main Street, blocking it from the rest

Tourists appeared utterly bewildered by the sudden ap-pearance of police with helmets, guns and 2 1/2-foot batons, on a street whose old-fashioned shops and old-time movie house evoke a peaceful, small-town America. A few of the youthful marchers were seized and taken off. Then loudspeakers announced the decision to close the park, and an estimated 30,000 tourists were ushered out,

The park opened at the normal hour this morning. Officials sald that uniformed Anaheim police kept watch from nonpublic areas in the park and that the Disneyland security force had been in-

Security guards "are going to be much more careful" in applying the park's personal-apa Disneyland spokesman said.

He added, however, that loog hair alone would not bar any-one from the park.

Disneyland officials had tried for the entire day to avoid such a confrontation. It was considered so serious a threat to Disneyland's image as an in-ternational tourist attraction that both the president and ex-ecutive vice-president of Walt Disney Productions were on hand the entire time. Visitors Searched

It was the most uptight Disneyland had been in its 15-year, 90-million-visitor history. For weeks underground newspapers across the country had heen advertising a vipple inva-sion of Disneyland on Aug. 6— coinciding with the 25th anniversary of the A-bombing of Hiroshima. THE ART MARKET: Things Are Seldom What They Seem

By Souren Melikian

ONDON, Ang. 6.—Last week Christie's and Sotheby's produced their end-of-season statistics and announced their 1969-70 turnover figures (IHT, Aug. 1-2). Christie's reported a 31 percent increase this year. Sotheby's announced a combined turnover (with Parke-Bernet Galleries, New York) of £40,347,341 ($96.833.618), or up about $12 million over last season's announced

One might thus be led to believe that everything is better in this best of all possible worlds, with a continuing upward trend m all categories of objets d'art. Such, however, is not the case. The picture is less than rosy. In fact, it is far more complicated than mere figures can suggest, for the art market is undergoing profound changes that may, in the long run, alter its present structures.

Until about last Easter, the situation was roughly equivalent to that of the previous season. In other words, the supply of high-quality works of art tended to decrease and the prices to go up, although at a more moderate pace than in 1968-69. The most expensive category, works by the Impressionist masters, was being slowly replaced by some next-bests: pointillists, post-Impressionists, fauve. expressionists.

Take, for example, the Dec. 10, 1969, sale at Sotheby's, one of the finer sales of Impressionists and modern masters during the season, with a typical blend of well-known masters and lesser artists. It included such absolute masterpleces as "Les Trois Danseuses—Jupes Jaunes" 132 by 25 3 4 inches), which went for $288,000, a moderate price in view of the quality of the picture painted by the recognized giant, Edouard Degas. There were also far more modest achievements, such as a landscape called "La Fossette" by the post-Impressionist artist Maximilien Luce, which sold for $25,000.

Passing Muster

And, indeed, the major minor combination was revealing, for one could see a Eugène Boudin, whose work has recently been com-mercially discovered, rise higher, at $98,400, than a very fine land-scape by the long-recognized Alfred Sisley, whose "Les Talus de Chemin de Fer" was knocked down at $52,800.

Some works which would have been thought unsalable only two years before thus managed to pass muster. At the same sale-or rather as a postscript later that same day-an incredibly bad portrait by Emile Schuffenecker made $840, while a seascape by the virtually unknown (to the non-specialist) Alfred Stevens fetched $1,200. A vague whiff of Impressionism, plus the glamorous atmosphere created by the presence of the masterpieces earlier in the morning, had no doubt helped.

Generally speaking, hetween October, 1989, and March, 1970. previously neglected sectors became more expensive as the betterknown objects became less obtainable. English pottery and Victorian furniture in England, Art Nouveau and posters all over the world, increased steadily in price,

I think the first signs of a more sober attitude on the part of buyers became apparent about mid-March. In France, at the Hôtel Drouot, the run-of-the-mill Items, from pictures to objets d'art, began to fetch slightly lower prices. Dealers whispered to each other that more and more lots were falling to reach the reserve prices eet by sellers and were having to be This, of course cannot be checked for French auctioneers seldom release any figures concerning the objects which are "bought in," as the phrase goes. In England, too the atmosphere became slightly gloomier. In fields that are traditionally weaker because buyers are fewer-fields such as archaeology—prices for rather ordinary objects were rather low.

Then came the Easter lag, when sales are always less numerous, followed by the third round of sales with the first big auctions in mid-April. At Christle's, on April 14, a remarkable Matisse made $75,000 and an even better still-life by Cézanne, $64,000. Neither price was really high. But they were both still honorable. Significantly, a very fine landscape by a master who is appreciated only by a handful of connoisseurs, the 19th-century romantic Georges Michel of the French school, sold for very little money ($3.530) in spite of its quality, in splte of its having been exhibited at the Royal Academy in December 1949-

January 1950. Similar observations could be made about most sales in London and Paris: the lesser or not-so-well-known objects were going down in price.

First Signs

In June came the first indications of a real crisis. In Paris on June 17, two remarkable Sisleys were offered for sale at Galliers. One of them was a perfect example of the sort of picture that is commercially desirable. It was called "Le Givre a Veneux" (Frost at Veneux), had been bought from the artist by Durand-Ruel and was reportedly sold by the latter to its present owners. It had hardly been seen by anyone and was masterpiece. According to a dealer, the price ($74,000) was inferior by 20 percent to the price it would have made the year before. In fact, it is generally thought that the picture had been bought in.

A week later on June 2 came an important sale of old masters at Sotheby's in London. It was of the highest orderartistically speaking. But, in commercial terms, it was hardly a success. A auperb portrait by the Dutch 17th-century master Frans Hals, as good as anything the Dutch museums can offer, was bought in for only £120,000 ($288,000) or two-thirds of the 1960 price. A spokesman for Sotheby's pointed out that the 1960 price had been unusually high due to fierce competitive bidding between two collectors. Be that as it may, several other pictures of equal importance failed to find buyers—a major

Van Dyck, among them.

Two days later another sale of old masters at Christie's showed that the crisis was genuine. As in every sale, of course, there were ups and downs. While the German primitives sold badly in the mornir—the world record for a Guardi was broken in the afternoon. What counted, however, was that some im-portant works remained unsold. At the time, one had a feeling that the sale might have been damaged by some awkward wrangling over the accuracy of the description "Adenauer Collection", which had been applied to the pictures: Looking back now, it seems safe to say that the failure was not due to doubts about provenance, but rather to a general weakening of the market.

The final seasonal sales last month in London did little to modify this general impression. Again, some records were broken at Christie's—A Charles II silver inkpot, for example, fetched $187,000, considerably more than the most optimistic estimates. And Sotheby's sale of stiver went extremely well. But while records make fine stories, they do not make a market. The average trend is what really matters and, just now, it is not favorable. more, the trade is beginning to feel the pinch in Paris and London alike. It must be remembered that far more objets d'art are sold by dealers than at auction. No statistics are svallable, of course, for no dealer would dream of releasing detailed figures concerning his own business to the general public.

There are two main reasons for the unfavorable state of affairs.

One is doubtless temporary: the stock market crisis in America has taken its toll on the Brt market and continuing uncertainty has done nothing to improve the picture. The second reason is more permanent: the art market is now undergoing structural changes on all levels. I shall discuss these later and will attempt to determine the effect these are likely to have on the forth-

Europe would be resounding with its fame. This show runs through Aug. 30: be sure to pay it a visit and view the real quality of art, even in modern Britain.

The summer exhibition at the Hamet Gallery, 8 Cork Street, W. 1, contains a number of the same names, but continues with a very wide selection of other foreigners, and more recent British works. Especially no-table among these are the re-cent bronzes of Michael Ayrten.

drawings by Keith Vaughan, oils by André Dzierzynski soon to have an exhibition in Florence with Vaccarino, typical watercolors by Josef Herman and drawings by Augustus John, some Minton drawings, a John Craxton oil, and two brilliant watercolors by Edward Burra.

T recently praised the Easn. Phillips Gallery for its bollmer exhibition. It now has a further selection of Bellmer etchings. The Bellmer representation in London has been further angmented by a second exhibition of Bellmer drawings, paintings and graphics, at the Robert Self Gallery. Horse Shoe Yard, Brook Street, W.L.

: Belimer is often considered a surrealist, and though much of his total ocurre could be so considered, his obsessive precocupation with the erotic and the feminine, and his passion for the more esoteric of De Sade's writings, make him very much an artist on his own, owing ro allegiance to school or theory. One could analyze all day, and to little purpose. For the beauty of Bellmer's work defies analysis, and stands foursquare like some fantastic act of Nature.

The Royal Academy, Burlington House, Piccadilly, is the scene of a rather unusual exhibition through Oct. 4, entitled "200 Years of Spode." Josiah Spode, the founder of the famous pottery company, the bicentenary of which is commemorated, was a Staff... shire potter apprentired to Thomas Whieldon. In 1766 h bought his own kilns at Stoke. on-Trent, and founded the coin pany which still bears his name

For all her artistry and force, and the memories she evokes. Miss Hepburn is neither French nor very musical both of which would seem essential to the part.

As of last night. Danielle Darrieux is Coco. She is French and she can sing, which gives the show a needed authenticity and musicality. Perhaps an even more important asset is her femininity. For all this Coco's bravado and biuster, sho is all woman-heautiful, rharming, flirtatious, and even vulnerable.

One of Miss Darrieux's best moments is the scene in which her father-projected on iilniabandons her. Facing the :u-dience, without words, without ever verging on the mawkish. she makes you feel the young times, one gets a glimpse of what made Coco Coco.

One of the very few whose names are known was Derick Baegert, who lived in Wesel His never did an individual portrait. On view is his vivid courtroom scene with judge, the accused (a young man) and spectators, a very rare subject in those days. This is the sober world of the citizen.

Baegert's nephew, Jan Joest of Kaikar, another little town north of Cologne, made an alter painting for his hometown, supposedly between 1488 and 1508. It consists of four panels, the upper two measuring about 90 by 27 inches each, and the two lower ones 41 by 33 1/2. Each of the four panels is composed of four paintings of equal size on both back and

The people in Joest's paintings have their own life and personality. There is no exaggeration, but a detachment like either the divine elevation of the Gothic or the courtly eleance of the Master of the Life of the Virgin. It is a some-what rational distance with which the people of the Renaissance looked at themselves and the world. The colors are deep and bright but not so gay as those of the Middle Ages.

Among the 45 paintings are five individual portraits-four men and one women. This is another unmistakable, though rare, harbinger of the time when the individual would become the center of thinking and action. One of the most mysterious objects in the whole exhibition is a painting of almost miniature size, 8 5/8 by 6 1/4 inches It is called "The Magic of Love" (Der Liebessauber) and shows a very rare erotic scene which can only be traced back to some

The burning fire in the chimney, the little dog lying on a cushion, all the details in the room, painted with delicate strokes and colors, create a unique intimacy. When this picture arrived in Cologne (from Leipzig) for the exhibition, the discussion started all over again about who the artist was. It could have been almost any one of the artists whose work is also OR view.

The sculpture, for the most part, was created in Kalkar, The heavenly smiles of the saints, the lofty pleats of their clothes and the gay colors which some of them still have are late Gothic at its best.

There is much more to see: the golden monstrances and reli-quaries, the stained-glass windows, the huge Bibles and little prayer books and books of hours with their delicate miniatures. There are woodcuts, clearly belonging to the Middle Ages, drawings and engravings (especially those of Israel van Meckenem, which show the in-fluence of Albrecht Dürer and the mannerism of a new time.) There is tinware, glassware and furniture. It is too much

The paintings, sculptures and engravings are an exhibition on their own. Nobody can enjoy them by just having a quick look. Only if one goes back and forth, sits down and compares the different masters can one grasp the development of painting in those days, the differences which separate the Middle Ages from the Renaissance and the things which go into the perfection of the late Gothic. The exhibition leaves several doubts about its own purposes. It proves that the artists of this period namally did not express the political social and religious tarmoils which were significant of their time. How could they?

They did what their customer

asked them to do. Despite some hints to the contrary, there was still not much room for much creative individualism. For the last time, religion was at the heart of everything. The artists of the late Gothic brought heaven down to earth. Only the next generation would give up the divine and put itself in its place.

Then, there are other problems. As much as the 15th century resembles our own time, we have to be very careful in drawing comparisons. The paintings reveal a beauty that we can enjoy and, at the same time, a world which is absolutely foreign to us. The missing names. of different masters symbolize how greatly their era differed from our own and how far we must go to uncover true identity

There is another question: What is the use of such an exhibition? Why all this effort? There are, of course, those who try to draw a line from late Gothic to pop art. Nobody denies that we can trace the evolution of art through the centuries. It helps to understand why certain developments took place. But such a scholarly approach is not enough. It may even create confusion by taking away the identity and unique achievements that every period possesses.

An exhibition such as this one makes it easier to understand that every development in art has its own intrinsic value, its own actuality and can best be understood by itself, on its own terms. But this reasoning should not be used as an excuse to flee the shocking

Roots of Contemporary Italian Art Part two of a two-part series. By Edith Schloss not much more "modern" than the Victor Emmanuel wedding cake monument in Piazza Veneria, and people still turn away from you with a bored sigh when you mention it. The "furthest out" art works used to be the early paintings by De Chirico and his fellows, and some excellent late impressionists little-known outside of Italy. But even these had been painted three decades before.

But today the Galleria Nasionale d'Arte Moderna makes Peggy Guggenheim's collection in Venice look positively dowdy. Last summer, light shows were projected against the great fin de siècle facade of the museum, and many electronic concerts and modern dance and theater events have taken place inside it. It was the first museum to show Pollock in Europe, and it now houses one of the finest op and kinetic art displays on this continent perhaps any-All this is due to the energy of a lady with vision; Dr. Palma Bucarelli. Against all the oddslack of funds, personnel, enthusiasm she has wrested innovating concessions from a sleepy or unwilling Italian government. Perhaps the government (the museum is state-owned), justly proud of the glorious past of the country, has little consideration for the artistic present. And among other problems Dr. Bucarelli is facing is that, thus far, she has not been able to display her very good collections of abstract and was to install the op art to advantage. Once the public has been lured into the museum by this obvious and dazzling magnet, the rest is easy. There is a great deal to see in addition to the contemporary sections (THT, Aug. 1-2).

In older, more spacious halls, the roots of all recent developments in Italy can be studied. For instance there are some excellent works by Balla, the vir-tuoso of the futurists; his studies of movement are as fresh as if they had been done yesterday. And in a 1910 "Park," the sky, clouds, foliage and turf are painted in beautifully inter-changeable patterns. There too you will find Modigliani's refined stylisation in a nude and portrait, and early and later works by De Chirico, of course, as well as some metaphysical canvases by his lesser-known brother Savinio. Best of 21, there is a whole enchanting school of late impressionism. There is the dash and sparkle of De Pisis: Tosi's thick blooming landscapes; the early Maifai's glowing flesh tones and carnations; Scipione's Roman night fantasles; the strong forms and amazing simplicity of Roberto Melli; Semeghini's subtleties; the dusky Tuscan views by Rosal so dear to the Florentines; pearl gray Trom-badoris and almost primitive Donghis. But most refreshing to the eye are the beautifully serene still lifes by Giorgio

Morandi. The patient visitor will find other work to his own taste in the same section, but with all this, there are other museum halls yet to be explored. In another wing, late 18th-century, as well as 19th-century and early 20th-century art proves once more that style is not a question of country but of period. For there you will find Italian answers to the Directoire in Canova and Bison; to the Biedermeier of Runge in Matteini; in Filippo Pallizzi's intimate glimpses of nature and in his animal studies, you may see parallels to the early Courbet; Medardo Rossi's impressionist waxes are close to Rodin (No doubt they influenced the early work of the American sculptor Nakian.) In Segantini's ambitious views and in the battle scenes by Pattori and Signorini, you can find the same attention to detail as in Norman Rockwell, Further, there is a wealth of examples of Art Nouveau, from brooding Munch-like dramatie loneliness to huge, flamboyant interpreta-tions of Greek myths-like frescoes in opers houses. There are many canvases with a sunny and homey intimacy à la Vuillard, and a whole school of serious pointillists, who, par-ticularly in Pellizza, presage fu-turism. And even though there are hardly any "major" masters here, the visitor with a capacity for enjoyment and desire to explore unknown territory will find much to interest him.

The government has expressed some opposition to conglomerates and G & W has reached the size where various govern-ment agencies would tend to Add to that the uncertainty about accounting rules changes that may complicate merger bookkeeping. Growth from Within

There is one more reason for the change: Analysis and investment advisers are telling investors to look at growth from within Earnings boosted by mergers are out.

G & W's existing operations are tucked under an il-division organization, each with its autonomous operating head.

The operating entities gain It is quite a change for a provides planning and other company which, between 1864 services to each. to sell off earlier acquisitions to stay alive.

G & W has escaped that fate thanks to the relatively long-term nature of its gigantic debt and the low interest rates it was able to get. G & W raised much of its capital before the worst of the money pinch. What short-term corporate debt it has sold are secured by lines of bank credit, the company

The company's debt rocketed to more than $900 million from less than $100 million between 1966 and 1969 and its annual interest expense to $64 million from $7.4 million.

But most of its debt does not mature during this decade. Meanwhile, the key to making a heavy debt load pay off is rising earnings.

G & W has managed to keep carnings on the up cide despite the general deterioration of the economy. It is expected to earn $2.25 a share for the fiscal year which ended July 31. That comparee with $2 a share in fiscal 1969 before a gain on the sale of securities.

Growth Rate Accelerated

But Analysts Doubt Change in Fed Policy

By H. Erich Heinemann NEW YORK, Aug. 7 (NYT). the rate of expansion in money and bank credit accelerated rapidly in the last few weeks, banking data published yesterday showed.

But despite the higher rate of growth, analysts expressed doubt that this reflected any fundamental change in the Federal Reserve System's policy of "moderate" mone-tary expansion. Tre Treasury is currently in the process of refunding $6.5 billion in maturing debt, they noted, add-ing that, during such periods, the money managers traditionally fol-

Jump in Wholesale Price Index Revised Upward to 0.6 % in July

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7 (Reuters)—The Labor Department today revised its figures for its July wholesale price index, which now shows an increase of 0.6 percent instead of the earlier-reported 0.5 percent gain.

This makes the July gain the largest since the 0.8 percent increase registered in January. In June, the index rose 0.2 percent. The index is considered by many economists as an early warning device for measuring the nation's battle against in-flation as increases in wholesale prices generally mean that consumer prices are due to increase shortly after. And the consumer price index is the most popular measure of the nation's rate of inflation.

The department said that last month's wholesale index was 3.9 percent above the July. 1969, level. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the July index was up 0.4 percent, with industrial commodities up 0.3 percent and farm products up 1.5 percent

How to place your portfolio under investment management starting with as little as $5,000

If the money you have today is to grow in the future toward more income, or for education, travel, leisure, retirement, it must be kept working full time to achieve your goals. Yet you may find that you are actually losing ground due to infistion, taxes or lack of time for investment decisions. To help solve this problem, clients in 55 countries have turned to The Danforth Associates Investment Management Plan. It has, we believe, proved especially efficient in providing continuing capital growth supervision for portfolios of from $5,000 to $50,008—on behalf of people who recognize and can share the risks and rewards of common stock investments. The cost is modest, as low as $100 per year.

For a complimentary copy of a 42 page report describing this tested plan, its complete 10-year "performance record," and how it may help you now, simply write Dept. M-51.

BOOKS

TIME AND AGAIN

By Jack Finney. Stmon & Schuster. 398 pp. $7.91 Reviewed by Thomas Lask

WE all have our favorite ages. I have long thought that it would be very pleasant to be a fifth-century BC Athenian, with a handful of Phoenician slaves to do the household chores and an uncomplaining wife to rear the kids. Rising early and shaking the dust of the slums off my feet, I'd wander off to the agora, take in a neat wrestling match or two in the stadium or watch a couple of stylish discoboli, and then, after a leisurely lunch and bath, listen to that old gadfly Socrates provide an afternoon's entertainment: "Tell me, Charmides, is not readiness of the mind a sort of nimbleness ?" If I were Charmides, I'd take my time answering that one.

A man could live pretty decently in 18th-century London, too, provided someone back harvested the crop and paid rent on the ancestral acres. If the old pater had a governsinecure or two, that wouldn't hurt either. I'd get John Cleland to show me the In between I'd loll sights. around the coffeehouses and maybe catch the irascible Dr. Johnson turning on his young friend: "Sir, you have but two topics, yourself and me: I am sick of both."

Jack Finney has a favorite age, too, New York City in the 1880s, and out of his interests he has fashioned a fanciful novel a blend of science fiction, nos-talgia, mystery and acid commentary on supergovernment and its helots. The ingredients have not been entirely homogenized, and (to mix the metaphor a little), some of the joinery shows. But his book is an inviting and highly readable piece of seasonal entertainment Si Morley, a painter who is only a cog in a large advertising agency, is tapped by the military for a highly secret project. After some testing and other huggermugger, St is let in on the thinking behind the enterprise. Suppose, the head of the operation tells him, suppose time is not a sequence but a simulfaneity, with the past, present and future existing at the same instant. Time then; it is explained to him, would be like a river, the future a bend in the waterway to come, the past also a bend a little way back. Therefore, if a way could be found to go back, a man could live as easily in the past as in the present. Of course, he would have no right to monkey with that past or become involved with it or any-thing that could change the course of history.

Si agraes to join the project and picks his own favorite period: New York City in 1882. There are reasons; they include a mysterious and cryptic letter that was mailed in 1882 and a troubling death and funeral never convincingly explained. Siwants to locate the clues that will help clear up both the letter and the death. Working out of the famous Dakota apartments on Central Park West, Si manages to make his way back to his chosen year find the people he is after and, contrary to orders, does get involved with them. The plot becomes more and more involuted, the mysteries thicker, the solutions more unexpected. The roster includes a blackmailing.

Black Manager Is Forecast For Baseball Within 3 Years

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 7 (AP).—The major leagues will have a black baseball manager within the next three years and Willie Mays, Ernie Banks and Maury Wills are the leading candidates, a national organization on race relations has predicted.

The forecast was made by the Race Relations Information Center, with headquarters here. a private, non-profit body that gathers and distributes information on race problems. The BRIC said in a special report on "Blacks in Pro Sports" that it had been informed by one executive that all 24 big-league teams had. been instructed by commissloner Bowle Kuhn to recruit, and develop minority personnel for executive positions. The commissioner had no immediate comment. Jackie Robinson, the first Negro to break into majorleague baseball, has been the most critical of the game for passing over worthy black personnel for administrative jobs. Pro football and pro basketball are similarly guilty, the report said,

"Blacks in all three sports say that only on the super-star level are the races equal," Ber-nard E. Garnett, who compiled the report, stated.

"That's nice. Where is Joel?" "He's sleeping at his friend's ... B.J. He said if Jeonifer can sleep somewhere else so can he."

"Where does that leave us?" I asked my wife.

"Well, we had three to start with, we got rid of two for the night, and we gained one, so we're only short one.

"It saves on food," I agreed. "Not really," my wife said. "We had fish tonight, but Ann Lindsay doesn't like fish, so I had to go out and get her a steak. Then when Connie saw Ann was getting a steak she wented one, too."

"I wouldn't mind having a ateak myself." I said. "You can't, Somebody's got to eat the fish."

The next weekend when I came home. Connie was missing, but Jennifer had two friends and Joel had B.J. At eight o'clock I ordered them all to bed.

A detail from one of Gisèle Freund's photographs of James Joyce, who, as a subject, was "patient, cooperative and extremely eager to get good results." ...

GISELE FREUND

Sociological Photographer

PARIS.—John Singer Sargent used to I say a portrait is a painting with a little something wrong about the mouth. Gisèle Freund, the noted photographer, adds that the mouth is the most revealing feature because, she says, it is the hardest to control.

Well known as a reporter-photographer (she was an early contributor to Life and a leading member of the Magnum Agency), Miss Freund has made photographic portraits of personalities from Martin Buber to Evita Peron. Her specialty is portraits of writers, for the simple reason that she is fascinated by literature. Writers are especially hard to photograph:
"Their photograph is their only link with their public," she says. "Neturally, they want to be shown in their best

A woman with a strong face, sharp quick eyes and a degree of camera shyness, Gisèle Freund is understanding about people's reactions to their portraits. The picture we have of ourselves is more psychological than physical. That's one reason why people are almost always disappointed in their photographs—they see more in themselves than other people

In her new book, "Le Monde et Ma Camera" (published in Paris by Deooel end to be published in the U.S. by Dial Press', Miss Freund describes an evening at Adrlenne Monnier's bookshop in 1939 when she showed an eudience of leading French writers the color portraits she had made of them. As each photograph appeared on the screen there were various mosns I"I should have sheved that dey," "If only you had taken me 20 years ago", summarized by Jean-Paul Sartre's remark at the end of the evening: "We all look as if we're just back from the wars." The photographs are, ofcourse, excellent. On the walls of Miss Freund's Montparnasse apartment are two Daumiers: one of the ploneering photographer Nadar in a balloon, the other of a politician gazing into the mirror and practicing his smile. He might well be any writer about to be photographed.

"Why do authors want to look like stars and stars like men of letters?" Miss Freund has asked. Born in Berlin, Gisèle Freund fled to Paris in 1933 to escape Hitler and to write her doctoral thesis on photography in the 19th century. Trained as a sociologist, her epproach to photography is more sociological than esthetic. She uses natural light whenever possible, hasn't the faintest interest in technique or experiment: loathes the slick pseudorevelatory photographs that are now the rage, and believes in taking as few photographs as possible: "For me," she says, "B photograph is the result of a meeting, not a fusiliade."

Mary Blume

In Berlin Miss Freund had taken plctures of early Nazis at work. In Paris she supported her studies by photography. Ber first published photograph was of a young girl who had thrown herself in the Seine. Her extraordinary color series of men of letters came ebout through coincidence: she was an early enthusiast of color film in 1938 and, as a frequent visitor to Adrienne Monnier's bookshop (and to Sylvia Beach's Shakespeare and Company across the Rue de l'Odéon). she met all the important writers of her time. "My first four color photos," she says, "were of a traffic light, an eperitif poster, a barbershop front, and Paul Valery." One of her most recent portraits is of Robert Lowell. One of her first was of the young André Malraux, "a handsome, high-strung and talented man who never stopped talking." EM. Forster emerged on film in a blur of shyness, Gide was exceptionally assured, Colette knew all the angles. Claudel's face on film is ar-rogant and cold, Mauriac's that of a bird of prey. Virginia Woolf, says Miss Preund, a beautiful "Incarnation of her prose." Shaw told Miss Freund how to use her camera and warned her not to cut off the point of his beard (she did). Among Miss Freund's most famous photographs is her series of James Joyce. who had been persuaded to pose for B photographic spread to help the launching of "Finnegans Wake." A color portrait of Joyce by Gisèle Freund appeared on the cover of Time on May 8, 1939. Edgy end uncomfortable as Joyce was, Miss Freund describes him as "very patient, cooperative, and extremely eager to get good results."

Gisèle Freund has never accepted a portrait commission, choosing only subjects who interest her. 'I don't retouch, I couldn't do commercial portraits." The results are revealing but never intentionally cruel; "I don't hate humanity," she says. "To the contrary.".

PEOPLE:

British actor Albert Finney and French movie star Anouk Aimée were married quietly in London yesterdey and there was no wedding ring, no reception and no honeymoon. "They are just going home quietly," said Miss Almée's teen-aged daughter Manuella.

It was Finney's second wedding and Miss Aimée's fourth. Miss Aimee, 38, wore a kneelength catmeal wool longsleeved dress and had her long euburn hair loose over her shoulders. Finney, who alternated Shakespearian roles with wild man" parts in movies like "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," wore a sober dark brown suit, white shirt and white tie.

Manuella gave a splash of trendy color with a floppy silk. shirt, knickerbockers and soft kid hoots in shades of tan. Superintendent registrar Frederick Beswick, who conducted the ceremony, said: "Mr. Finney did not give his wife a wedding ring. It is, after all, a matter of personal taste and not part of the legal requirements of the ceremony." There was no comment from the couple.

Entertainer Bobby Darin dived from a motor boat into Lake Tahoe Wednesday and pulled out a boy who was in danger of drowning. Darin and some friends were in the vicinlty because they had to bring their boat back to the King's Beach Marine at Crystal Bay, Nevada, to get more gasoline. "It was just fate that we were there at the time," said Darin. He said two boys, one about 8 and the other about 6, were on a moored boat about 50 feet from the marina, having made their way there on a raft and e small plastic tub. The younger boy paddled back to shore without incident in the raft, but when the older boy began paddling back in the tub, it filled with water and sank ebout 20 feet from shore.

Darin asked the boy if he was all right. The boy first said he was, but the water was deeper than he thought and he went under. Darin dived in after him and helped him to the pier.
